PART 1

Read the following message.

Dear Scott,

Has everyone adjusted to their new city yet? I know moving to Vancouver might have been difficult on your family, but you made the right choice. You would have been crazy to pass up such an amazing opportunity. That being said, the office sure isn't the same without you!

Anyways, you'd been asking if I had plans for the "big anniversary," so I had to write and tell what happened. Since Kelly loves the outdoors, I had the brilliant idea of hiking in Algonquin Park. I say "brilliant" because, as you know, I'm not a nature guy—a fact which might explain why my romantic gesture went so wrong.

We decided to bring Sparky, figuring he'd love running around off-leash. Big mistake! We'd been hiking for about 2 hours when Sparky, having spotted something interesting, suddenly tore off into the bush. Worried he'd get lost, we went chasing after him. Apparently, however, we should've been more worried about ourselves getting lost. By the time we'd caught up with him, the trail was nowhere in sight and we had no idea where we were. While Sparky sat wagging his tail, thinking this was the best game ever, Kelly and I panicked. Since we hadn't told anyone where we were going, it made no sense to stay put and wait for help. So we decided to keep walking, hoping we'd picked the right direction. Five hours later, with no sight of the trail and a darkening sky, we had our doubts. Amazingly, just as we started to think all was lost, we stumbled across an abandoned ranger cabin. There wasn't much inside, but it had the essentials: a map, a compass, a few cans of beans, and a bed. Having eaten the last of our food hours ago, we quickly dug into the beans. Then, exhausted, we collapsed into bed. The next morning we used the map and compass to lead us out of the woods. It turns out we'd only been a few kilometres from our car!

Needless to say, I have no intention of venturing back into the woods any time soon. Make sure to be careful if you do any hiking out there. It's easier to get lost than you think!

Cheers,

Jim

Hi Charlie,

Remember how we always wanted to learn another language? Well, today I picked up a brochure for the language school down the street from our place. Let's take a course and travel at the end of the semester! The courses offered are all for learners with 1. _____ . The French course 2. _____ than the others, but they promise that our language will get better fast. Or perhaps you'd prefer German? You've always wanted to see Germany, and this course 3. _____ . According to the brochure, 4. _____ . Or we could think about future job opportunities and take American Sign Language. If we took it in the evening, it wouldn't affect our summer jobs. But when the fall semester starts, 5. _____ . On second thought, I'd rather take something useful for traveling. Oh, I just noticed that the brochure doesn't mention the price of the courses. I'll call them.

Talk soon,

Gerry

Read the following passage.

A. On May 8, 1987, Canada introduced the one-dollar coin now known as the "loonie." It is eleven-sided and gold-coloured (it's actually bronze-plated nickel). The coin features a design by Ontario wildlife artist Robert Ralph Carmichael—a loon on one side and Queen Elizabeth II on the other. Canada is, after all, still a member of the British Commonwealth. The loon is a water bird common across Canada, known for its ability to swim great distances under water and for its beautiful, haunting call.

B. The loonie wasn't Canada's first one-dollar coin. A silver dollar was introduced in 1935, featuring an image of two voyageurs paddling a canoe on one side and, to display Canada's British connections, an image of Britain's King George on the other. But the silver dollar—which was made of nickel by 1967—wasn't used much because of its size and weight (about 23 grams). What was in common use was a green-and-white paper bill. However, the paper bills wore out within a year, which is why the loonie was introduced. It was expected to last twenty years, saving taxpayers $175–250 million.

C. In fact, the Royal Canadian Mint intended to use the same voyageur design for the new coin, but the master dies were lost somewhere between Ottawa and the Winnipeg production facility. The dies were entrusted to a courier service instead of to a high-security service. Worse, apparently no one asked the courier representative who showed up to take possession of the dies for identification. Worse still, designs for both sides of the coin went in the same package instead of in separate packages. For these reasons, the Mint suspected foul play and, fearing counterfeits, decided to go with a new design, that by Carmichael. An investigation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police concluded, however, that the dies were simply lost in transit.

D. In 1996, the orange-brown two-dollar paper bill was also replaced with a coin. Called a "toonie," the silver coin has a gold center (actually nickel and bronze) featuring another Canadian animal, a polar bear on an ice floe. Already light, at 7.3 grams, a lighter version was introduced in 2012 by replacing the nickel with steel. A lighter version of the loonie was also introduced. Unfortunately, the lighter coins didn't work in coin-operated machines, such as vending machines, parking meters, and washers and dryers in laundromats. As a result, many business owners have had to pay thousands of dollars to replace and upgrade their equipment.

E. Not given in any of the above paragraphs.

Decide which paragraph, A to D, has the information given in each statement below.

Select E if the information is not given in any of the paragraphs.

PART 4

Read the following article from a website.

A recent visit to Canada by Turks and Caicos Premier, Rufus Ewing, resparked interest in Canada's annexation of the country. Turks and Caicos, a Caribbean archipelago of 40 islands, has been a point of interest in Canada's history. This most recent debate marks the third time in the last century that Ottawa politicians have pushed to make the territory Canada's eleventh province. With over 300 kilometres of beaches, the tropical paradise would certainly be a welcome asset.

Ewing hailed Canada as a role model of fiscal responsibility from which his country could learn, accolades that resounded in Ottawa on the foreign leader's recent diplomatic junket to spur bilateral trade and tourism. When asked about the possibility of Turks and Caicos becoming a Canadian province, the Premier skirted the issue. He said he would not dismiss the idea completely, but he also offered us a glimmer of hope with the tantalizing observation that "there is no marriage without some kind of relationship first."

Liberal politician Peter Goldring is spearheading the latest campaign for the annexation and feels that much of the legwork has already been done. According to Goldring, "Canada has the greatest proportion of foreign investment in Turks and Caicos, and the second highest number of tourists to the country. Annexation would permit further growth in these areas." Goldring also argues that the island could serve as a gateway to Latin America. "The location would be ideal for military support from Ottawa and particularly for disaster relief," he adds.

Disappointingly, Conservative politician Janice Bloom calls the whole idea a pipe dream. "Canada is not in the business of annexing tropical islands," she claims. "Annexation would be extremely complicated since it would involve changes to the islands' tax and health care systems." Bloom contends that the government has more pressing matters.

Yet, according to a recent poll, the majority of the islands' residents support the proposal. Cab driver Ron Douglas says he'd love the opportunity to work in Alberta's oil industry. However, he admits the primary concern of many locals is that Canada's rules are too strict. "They go against the laid-back attitude of us islanders."

Choose the best option according to the information given on the website.

1. Ewing visited Ottawa to _____
- ◯ strengthen economic ties.
- ◯ discuss joining Canada.
- ◯ study financial policies.
- ◯ boost investment in Canada.

2. Arguments presented in favour of annexation suggest _____
- ◯ improved regulations for both countries.
- ◯ increased opportunities for both parties.
- ◯ increased tourism in both countries.
- ◯ improved health care for both parties.

3. Janice Bloom believes that annexing Turks and Caicos is _____
- ◯ a shared Canadian dream.
- ◯ a pointless proposition.
- ◯ a worthy cause to pursue.
- ◯ a pressing government issue.

4. Inhabitants of Turks and Caicos _____
- ◯ lead a different lifestyle than Canadians.
- ◯ want to speed up the process of joining Canada.
- ◯ have high rates of unemployment.
- ◯ value their independence from foreign powers.

5. The author of the article is _____
- ◯ in favour of the proposal.
- ◯ skeptical about the prospect.
- ◯ opposed to the annexation.
- ◯ surprised by the reactions.

I have to admit, reading that Canada could potentially 6. _____ made my day. To be honest, however, I am not at all surprised that 7. _____ . Turks and Caicos officials have approached the Canadian government before regarding the issue, and were rejected each time. As Ewing insinuates, they likely 8. _____ Canada now. I am, however, shocked by the 9. _____ . You'd think if there was any financial gain to be had, they would be the first on board. However, I do agree with Bloom's sentiment that at present, it is perhaps 10. _____ .

- ◯ enter into business with a Caribbean paradise
- ◯ forge new diplomatic ties with Turks and Caicos
- ◯ incorporate a group of sunny southern islands
- ◯ promote low-cost travel throughout the Caribbean

7.
- ◯ Ewing remained largely silent on the matter
- ◯ Goldring felt he has done all that he can
- ◯ Bloom thought Ewing has better things to do
- ◯ Douglas feared a Canadian job might be too hard

8.
- ◯ feel resentment toward
- ◯ desire compensation from
- ◯ need an incentive from
- ◯ want to avoid relations with 9.

- ◯ arrogantly overconfident Liberal position
- ◯ evidently guileful Turks and Caicos Premier
- ◯ highly reluctant Turks and Caicos resident
- ◯ tersely dismissive Conservative position

10.
- ◯ too late to implement
- ◯ an urgent political matter
- ◯ an unfeasible scheme
- ◯ too burdensome for businesses
