PART 1

Read the following message.

Dear Angela,

I've come up with a great idea to add to your tourist booklet of interesting and unusual things to do in our province. As you know, I'm on vacation for 4 weeks. I decided to check out apple picking as a seasonal worker. Can you imagine me picking apples? This wasn't my original plan, but I saw a few ads for pickers posted at a café, and I thought it would be interesting. Although, I was a little worried because the work is extremely different from my usual web design job.

After applying for one of the jobs, I bought cheap work clothes from a store in a nearby town. The employer suggested I get bug spray and sunscreen, as well. Although it's fall, the orchards still have insects and the sun is still strong.

I had heard getting work at an orchard was easy in autumn, and it was true! They didn't even ask for a resume or references. They just wanted to know how long I would be available, and when I could start. The pay is low and it's in cash, and the hours are longer than I expected, but they provide free accommodation on the farm and three big meals a day. I left my computer and smartphone at work, thinking I could live without them. Well, I'm certainly doing that! Imagine handwriting a letter like this in the twenty-first century! Unbelievable! I'm also keeping a handwritten journal.

A full day picking apples can be very tiring. We climb up and down ladders to get all the apples on a tree. We carefully twist the stem of each apple to get it off the tree. Once picked, the apple goes gently into a container. After you master the technique, it's amazing how many apples you can pick in a day. At the end of the day, we all get together in the kitchen and talk about many different things completely unrelated to apples, until we're too sleepy to say another word. I'm learning a lot about what people do outside my little web design world.

I would love to hear how your booklet is going. Mail is delivered directly to the apple farm several times a week, so hopefully you can get a letter to me before I get back to the city.

Sincerely,
Janice

Choose the best option according to the information given in the message.

1. Why is Janice picking apples while on vacation?

From: Jim <jimscareercounselling@mailing.ca>

Hi Albert,

I hope this email finds you well.

I know that you've been going through a hard time lately, but now that you've graduated, it's time to start thinking seriously about your career. Both of these jobs will provide a good introduction to 1. _____ . They also both entail 2. _____ , which I think suits you.

The advantage of the first option is that it is 3. _____ position. This option's 4. _____ is also probably more to your liking. I know you want to get an apartment soon, so you would have to factor transportation costs in your decision-making.

However, the second one is probably a better option for you for now. It's close to the transit station, so it would be more convenient for commuting. Did you ever take any courses related to care for the elderly? Anyway, it sounds like that is 5. _____.

PART 3

Read the following passage.

A. Just north of the city of Ottawa, Gatineau Park extends over 36,000 hectares and is considered the National Capital Region's principal green space. However, 400 years ago, the Gatineau Hills served as the hunting and fishing grounds of the Algonquins, one of Canada's many Indigenous peoples. According to archaeological findings, the Gatineau region was home to the Algonquin peoples for at least 4,000 years before its settlement by Europeans in the early 1600s. The area's forests, rivers, and underground resources attracted European trappers, loggers, miners, and merchants who exploited the land for economic gain. The area remains a regional economic booster today.

B. By the early nineteenth century, locals living near the Gatineau Hills began recognizing the benefit of preserving the region, not only for future generations to enjoy but also to defend the region's resources against excessive mining and deforestation. It took decades to convince the federal government to authorize protected status for the Gatineau Hills. More urgent issues occupied the government's attention until 1938, when Gatineau Park was officially founded. Although private homes located throughout the area prevented it from being granted status as a bona fide National Park, it is managed in much the same way as a national park by the National Capital Commission (NCC).

C. Today, Gatineau Park is one of the National Capital Region's principal tourist attractions and home to an extensive range of year-round recreational opportunities, including downhill and cross-country skiing, snowshoeing, and ice-skating. Weather permitting, visitors can also enjoy swimming, canoeing, and kayaking, not to mention cycling, climbing, camping, and hiking. The last of these activities is particularly popular during fall's final weeks, when the trees show off their most vivid colours. The region's natural beauty is also exhibited in the park's Visitor Centre, where photos and paintings of the region are sold as souvenirs. The Visitor Centre also displays information on the park's history and wildlife, and sells park passes.

D. Gatineau Park's continued protection remains a priority for the NCC. The administration faces ongoing challenges, most significantly, a dispute over private residence construction within park boundaries. Nonetheless, the NCC regards Gatineau Park as a successful example of government-sponsored cultural and environmental conservation. Plans for the park include preserving and restoring its natural resources. In future years, the development of recreational and ecotourism activities will aim to increase revenues to support the park. Finally, the NCC will expand community education facilities highlighting the role the Gatineau Hills have played in the region's history.

Read the following article from a website.

Tourism British Columbia recently announced a plan to inject public dollars into promoting the rapidly growing travel niche of ecotourism. The province's natural beauty attracts 20 million tourists annually. The government agency believes that number will soar if the province promotes ecotourism. The problem is deciding exactly where to channel those marketing and advertising dollars. The agency's marketing coordinator, Mijung Park, says the plan, for now at least, is to sell British Columbia as a premier destination for kayaking. "Kayaking lets tourists experience British Columbia's waterways without disturbing the surrounding ecosystems," says Park. "Ocean and river kayaking are both highly marketable. Our agency's next step is deciding on questions of which and how."

Business owner and tour guide Eric Ferland is making a push for the bulk of funds to be channeled into promoting established ocean kayaking businesses like his own, Kayak-O Inc. Ferland says amateur kayakers have long been drawn to the coastal waters and open sea, where the need to circumnavigate obstacles is nonexistent. "These river kayaking companies that have been popping up lately are promoting themselves as more of an 'extreme' sport, but ocean kayaking provides an equally exhilarating, yet less arduous, ecotourism excursion that spans a wide demographic, including older clientele," says Ferland.

But River Adventures Ltd. owner Lars Norgaard suggests Ferland's view ignores key differences in the two kayaking options. "River kayaks, in general, are designed for stability and maneuverability, as novice paddlers are often at the mercy of strong currents. We have clientele of all ages who want a more white-knuckle experience than what ocean kayaking can offer them. But any genuine fear subsides when clients discover that river navigation is straightforward, and nearby shores can be used as reference points." According to Norgaard, his young company boasts an impressive number of first-time, one-off customers, thanks to its competitive pricing.

Asked about her agency's future funding priorities, Park seems to imply that a rising tide will lift all boats. The decision, she insists, "needs to take into account the broad interests of the province, not the profits any individual enterprise stands to gain."

Choose the best option according to the information given on the website.

1. What is the topic of the article?

- ◯ superiority of ocean kayaks over river kayaks
- ◯ plans for publicly-funded kayak ecotourism
- ◯ differences between ocean and river kayaking
- ◯ difficulties in kayak-based ecotourism

2. According to Ferland, what is a drawback of river kayaking?

- ◯ the overall level of difficulty involved
- ◯ the lack of long-term growth in this sector
- ◯ the difficulty providing a fun excursion
- ◯ the potential for a dangerous experience

3. What does Ferland suggest about ocean kayaking in British Columbia?

- ◯ There are fewer operators than there are for river kayaking.
- ◯ It has a longer history in the area than river kayaking.
- ◯ There are more obstacles than there are in river kayaking.
- ◯ It has a reputation as being more dangerous than river kayaking.

4. What type of clients does Norgaard most likely attract?

- ◯ repeat customers
- ◯ younger adults
- ◯ competitive kayakers
- ◯ thrify tourists

5. What does Park say needs to be considered before making a decision?

- ◯ what is best for preserving the environment
- ◯ which activities interest residents the most
- ◯ what is best for British Columbia overall
- ◯ which activities will earn the most money
